

A Bright Idea: Homework

Homework is an important way for children to learn, yet it can be difficult to get a child to sit down and work. One way to encourage homework is to set up a positive working environment.

Each child is different, so sit down with your children and talk about various places, times and acceptable levels of background noise in which they could do their work. Children that are early risers may do their best work before school. Others may work better early in the evening.

Once you and your children find the optimal setting, homework time can be a positive experience for everyone!
